

City of Pasadena

Pasadena, CA

Mayor Victor Gordo

Pledge Summary

Nestled at the base of the San Gabriel Foothills, the City of Pasadena is home to a diverse and resilient community of 137,195 people deeply connected to its surrounding mountains, canyons, and urban green spaces. This landscape forms part of a vital ecological corridor for monarch butterflies and other pollinators that rely on intact habitat for breeding, migration, and overwintering across Southern California. In the aftermath of the Eaton Fire, which impacted Pasadena and neighboring Altadena residents, the importance of restoring and protecting natural systems has become even more clear—healthy, biodiverse landscapes are foundational to both ecological recovery and community resilience. Under the leadership of Mayor Victor Gordo, Pasadena reaffirms its continued commitment to protecting monarch and pollinator habitat through participation in the National Wildlife Federation’s Mayors’ Monarch Pledge. This pledge represents a forward-looking investment in recovery and renewal, prioritizing native plant restoration, pollinator-friendly practices in public spaces, and community engagement rooted in stewardship and education. By taking action now, Pasadena honors those affected by recent fire impacts while strengthening the living systems that help our city heal, adapt, and thrive together.
