The City of Portland is Maine's largest city with a population of just under 70,000. It is located on the shore of Casco Bay with strong historical and cultural connections to the sea. Portland has committed to preserve and protect natural resources and water quality as demonstrated by a prohibition on the use of synthetic pesticides and fertilizers, the establishment of numerous urban meadows sown with native plants, and development standards that emphasize natural landscapes over pavement. Mayor Dion is committed to ensuring that the City continues its stewardship of the natural environment and taking measures to support native pollinators such as the Monarch Butterfly.
